A Journey from Prospective Student to Pharmacy Student

Texas A&M Health Science Center Irma Lerma Rangel College of Pharmacy

Presented as an online informational two-three part series: A Journey from Prospective Student to Pharmacy Student is a series intended to reach future students virtually while customizing each series to a specific region in Texas.

The series is presented by current pharmacy students and faculty who organize and prepare all presentations. The series is broken up into a multiphase session of events over two weeks addressing the road to pharmacy school. Topics include: Becoming a Pharmacy Student, Application & PCAT, and the Pharmacy Profession.

HOW TO NOMINATE

Email pharm4me@aacp.org to request the nomination form.

Self-nominations are welcome!

NOVEL PHARMACY PRACTICE SETTINGS

The COD WorkForce Development Task force has been working on a charge to identify practice settings that can be showcased to prospective and current students to highlight unique or novel workforce opportunities for pharmacy graduates. The goal of this charge is to increase the pipeline of students into the profession, and inform matriculates of these career opportunities for graduates.

The Task Force is asking that institutions identify 3-5 alumni or preceptors from your program who are excellent examples of unique or novel practices beyond conventional community or institutional settings, and would be willing to share their story with prospective and current students by completing a questionnaire.

Email pharm4me@aacp.org for additional information or questions.

ANNA LOUISE JAMES: FIRST AFRICAN-AMERICAN FEMALE PHARMACIST

Born January 19, 1886, Anna Louise James made history as one of the first African-American female pharmacists.

The daughter of a Virginia plantation slave who escaped to Connecticut, she graduated from Brooklyn College of Pharmacy in New York. She operated a drugstore in Hartford until joining her brother-in-law, Peter, at Lane Pharmacy. When Peter got called away to fight World War I, he left the pharmacy to Anna.

Anna Louise James lived in the back of her pharmacy until her death in 1977 at the age of 91.
